Ascension Island

Ascension Island, discovered by the Portuguese in 1501 and situated at 7° 56' S and 14° 24' W, is the most important seabird breeding site in the tropical Atlantic. Many of the birds no longer nest on the main island but do so on Boatswainbird Island. Cats and rats have wiped out huge colonies of boobies and terns. Wide-awake terns survive nesting in colonies on the main island near the air strip. The Ascension island frigate bird is significantly different to its relatives on other tropical islands.
